

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
MIDDLE DISTRICT OF FLORIDA
TAMPA DIVISION

JOHN RUIZ,

Plaintiff,

v.

CASE NO. 8:17-cv-2586-T-23TGW

BANK OF AMERICA, N.A.,

Defendant.

ORDER

A decade ago, the Treasury Department introduced the Home Affordable Modification Program, which allegedly requires a participating bank to use “reasonable efforts” to modify the mortgage of a person in default or reasonably likely to default.¹ After an eligible mortgagor applies for a modification, the program requires several “trial payments” before the bank approves the modification.

THE PROCEDURAL HISTORY

In December 2016, John Ruiz and several dozen other plaintiffs sued Bank of America in the Circuit Court for Hillsborough County, and Bank of America removed the action. Case no. 8:17-cv-238-VMC (M.D. Fla.). The 149-page “shotgun” complaint, which copied swaths from a qui tam complaint in the Eastern

¹ Bank of America disputes that a “reasonably foreseeable” likelihood of default qualifies a mortgagor for a modification and contends that a modification requires either delinquency or an “imminent default.”

District of New York,² alleged fraud and the violation of Florida's Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act. In the part of the complaint specific to him, Ruiz alleged that an unidentified Bank of America employee told Ruiz at an unspecified time that a modification requires a default. (Doc. 1 at ¶ 244 in case no. 8:17-cv-238) Bank of America allegedly omitted to mention that a reasonably foreseeable likelihood of default might qualify a mortgagor for a modification. Moving to dismiss the complaint, Bank of America argued misjoinder of the plaintiffs' claims, failure to plead fraud with particularity, failure to state a claim, expiration of the four-year limitation, and the absence of a private right to sue a bank for violating the requirements of the Home Affordable Modification Program. Ruiz and the other plaintiffs voluntarily dismissed the action before responding to the motion to dismiss.

Four months after the voluntary dismissal, Ruiz and 118 other plaintiffs again sued Bank of America in a single action and alleged fraud. Case no. 8:17-cv-1534-RAL (M.D. Fla. June 27, 2017). Bank of America repeated the arguments from the earlier motion to dismiss. Before resolving the motion, the presiding judge observed that the complaint, which alleged neither each plaintiff's citizenship nor the amount in controversy between each plaintiff and Bank of America, failed to invoke diversity jurisdiction. (Doc. 15 in case no. 17-cv-1534) Ordered to amend the complaint to invoke diversity jurisdiction, Ruiz and the other plaintiffs submitted a 403-page complaint. (Doc. 16 in case no. 17-cv-1534) For the third time, Bank of America moved to dismiss the complaint and repeated the arguments from the earlier motion. The presiding judge in that action found misjoinder, severed the plaintiffs' claims, and ordered the plaintiffs to sue separately.

The plaintiffs heeded the presiding judge's command. Between October 30, 2017, and November 3, 2017, more than a hundred plaintiffs sued Bank of America in the Middle District of Florida in eighty actions and alleged fraud under Florida common law. Excepting names, dates, addresses, and the like, the complaints are identical. The actions are distributed among eight district judges in the Middle District of Florida. In two actions, the presiding judges found the claims barred by the four-year limitation.³

In Ruiz's fourth complaint (but the first complaint in this case), Ruiz alleged (Doc. 1) four misrepresentations by Bank of America. First, Bank of America allegedly failed to mention that a reasonably foreseeable danger of default might qualify a mortgagor for a modification; second, Bank of America stated that the mortgagors failed to provide Bank of America with the documents necessary to complete the modification; third, Bank of America orally notified the mortgagors that the bank approved the requested modification; and fourth, Bank of America charged Feb. 27, 2018) (Chappell, J.), appeal filed (Case no. 18-11337). Additionally, a district judge in California found an identical claim barred by a limitation. *Mandiosa v. a “fraudulent” inspection fee. For the fourth time, Bank of America moved (Doc. 11) to dismiss the complaint.

A February 1, 2018 order (Doc. 14) dismisses each fraud claim except the claim based on Bank of America’s alleged misrepresentation of the eligibility requirement for a modification. In the remaining claim, Ruiz alleges that on March 9, 2011, a Bank of America employee, “Isranda,” told Ruiz that a modification requires a default. According to Ruiz, a modification in fact requires either a default or an “eminent” [sic] danger of default. (Doc. 1 at ¶ 38) Allegedly relying on Bank of America’s misrepresentation, Ruiz stopped paying his mortgage and “fell into default status.” (Doc. 1 at ¶ 39) Ruiz attributes the loss of his house and the equity in his house to Bank of America’s alleged misrepresentation.

On June 18, 2018, a month after the close of discovery, Bank of America moved (Doc. 30) for summary judgment. Bank of America argues that a company other than Bank of America misrepresented the items over which Ruiz sues and that Rooker-Feldman bars the fraud claim. Local Rule 3.01(b) required Ruiz to respond to the motion no later than July 2, 2018, but Ruiz moved (Doc. 31) successfully for a two-week extension of the time to respond to the motion for summary judgment.

Four days after the expiration of the time within which to respond, Ruiz moved (Doc. 38) to defer the summary judgment motion under Rule 56(d) and to amend the complaint. Because Ruiz provided “no cogent reason for deferring the resolution of Bank of America’s motion for summary judgment” and because Ruiz failed to explain or to identify the contemplated amendment, a July 27, 2018 order (Doc. 41) denies Ruiz's motions and orders Ruiz to respond no later than August 2, 2018 to Bank of America's June 18, 2018 motion for summary judgment. Five days after the expiration of the time within which to respond, Ruiz fails to respond to Bank of America's motion for summary judgment and fails to move for an extension of the time within which to respond to Bank of America's motion.

DISCUSSION

I. Rooker-Feldman bars the fraud claim.

Bank of America argues (Doc. 30 at 19) that Ruiz attempts in effect to attack the state-court foreclosure and the resulting deficiency judgment, and Ruiz fails to respond to Bank of America's argument.

The weight of authority strongly supports Bank of America's argument that Rooker-Feldman bars the fraud claim. In Figueroa v. Merscorp, Inc., 766 F.Supp.2d 1305 (S.D. Fla. 2011) (Altonaga, J.), aff'd, 477 Fed.Appx. 558 (11th Cir. May 11, 2012), a bank sued in state court to foreclose a mortgagor's property, and the state court entered judgment for the bank and ordered a foreclosure sale. Moving in state court to vacate the judgment, the mortgagor argued that the bank secured the foreclosure judgment through fraud. After the state court denied the motion, the mortgagor sued the bank in federal court under RICO and "[sought] damages arising out of the loss of his home." After thoroughly surveying the authority, Judge Altonaga found the claim "inextricably intertwined" with the foreclosure judgment. 766 F.Supp.2d at 1315–25. Affirming the dismissal under Rooker-Feldman, the Eleventh Circuit concluded, “The state court judgment formed the basis of or was intertwined with the injury complained of in Figueroa’s instant complaint: that [Figueroa] lost his one half-interest in his property and home because of an improper foreclosure proceeding.” 477 Fed.Appx. at 560.

Similarly, Nivia v. Nation Star Mortg., LLC, 620 Fed.Appx. 822 (11th Cir. Aug. 19, 2015), strongly suggests a bar by Rooker-Feldman. In Nivia, a bank won a foreclosure judgment in December 2011. Nine months after the judgment and a month before the foreclosure sale, the mortgagor requested a HAMP modification, which the bank denied. After the sale, the mortgagor sued in federal court for violations of HAMP and Florida’s Deceptive and Unfair Trade Practices Act.

Finding the HAMP claim not barred by Rooker-Feldman, Nivia explains, “The homeowners alleged only that the lenders failed to respond adequately to their September 2012 request for a loan modification, which could not have been at issue in the foreclosure proceeding that concluded in December 2011.”⁴ 620 Fed.Appx. at 824. In contrast, Nivia finds the FDUTPA claim barred by Rooker-Feldman: “We construe the homeowners’ allegation to extend beyond the lenders’ denial of the September 2012 loan modification request and to include conduct before the foreclosure judgment. In effect, the homeowners’ claim amounts to an equitable defense to foreclosure that [the homeowners] failed to raise before the state court.” 620 Fed.Appx. at 825. Because success on the FDUTPA claim suggested error in the foreclosure judgment, Nivia finds the FDUTPA claim barred by Roquer-Feldman.

Nothing (or, at least, nothing consequential) appears to distinguish the fraud claim in this action from the RICO claim in Figueroa or the FDUTPA claim in Nivia. Ruiz alleges that Bank of America misrepresented the eligibility requirement for a modification and that this purported misrepresentation was “specifically designed by BOA to set Plaintiff up for foreclosure.” (Doc. 1 at ¶ 38) The majority of the complaint chronicles a scheme in which Bank of America allegedly tricked Ruiz into not paying the mortgage so that Bank of America could foreclose.⁵ Ruiz complains exclusively about a misrepresentation that preceded — and ultimately caused — the foreclosure. And Ruiz alleges principally that the misrepresentation resulted in the “loss of home equity,” a loss occasioned by the state-court action, which foreclosed the plaintiff’s right of redemption and resulted in a deficiency judgment that included not just principal and interest owing but also the inspection fees owing under the lending agreement. In sum, the fraud claim in this action appears a circuitous but unmistakable attempt to impugn the validity of the foreclosure judgment.⁶

⁶ If not barred by Roquer-Feldman, the fraud claim is barred by res judicata (which some decisions occasionally describe in this circumstance as “merger-and-bar”). Under Florida law, a compulsory counterclaim includes a counterclaim “logically related” to the claim. Neil v. South Fla. Auto Painters, Inc., 397 So. 2d 1160 (Fla. 3d DCA 1981). The Florida decisions construe this “logical-relation” test broadly. Montgomery Ward Dev. Corp. v. Juster, 932 F.2d 1378, 1381 & n.1 (11th (continued...))

II. Ruiz undisputedly fails to identify a misrepresentation by Bank of America.

Even if not barred by Rooker-Feldman, the claim fails because Ruiz identifies no misrepresentation by Bank of America. Citing records between Ruiz and another mortgage servicer, Bank of America argues (Doc. 30 at 2–12) persuasively that Ruiz sued the wrong company. Under Rule 56(e)(2) and in this order, that a company other than Bank of America purportedly misrepresented the eligibility requirement for a modification is undisputed. Because Ruiz fails to identify a misrepresentation by Bank of America, the bank is entitled to summary judgment.

CONCLUSION

Bank of America allegedly told Ruiz that a mortgage modification requires a default but omitted to mention that a “reasonably foreseeable/imminent” default might qualify a mortgagor for a modification. The complaint alleges that Bank of America intentionally misrepresented the requirement in an effort to trick Ruiz into a foreclosure, which Bank of America successfully secured after suing in state court. Because the fraud claim is “inextricably intertwined” with the state-court foreclosure, Rooker-Feldman bars the claim. Even if not barred by Rooker-Feldman, the fraud claim fails because Ruiz undisputedly identifies no misrepresentation by Bank of America.

Cir. 1991). The fraud claim in this action relates logically to Bank of America’s claims in the foreclosure action: Bank of America alleged in state court that the plaintiff defaulted on the mortgage, and the plaintiff alleges in this action that the default resulted from Bank of America’s misrepresentation of the eligibility requirement for a modification. Because the plaintiff must have counterclaimed but failed to counterclaim in state court, res judicata prevents the plaintiff’s litigating the claim now. (Viewed somewhat differently, the fraud claim constitutes an affirmative and equitable defense that the plaintiff waived by failing to assert the defense in the state-court foreclosure action. Whatever the label, the same result obtains.)

The motion (Doc. 30) for summary judgment is GRANTED, and the clerk is directed to enter a judgment of dismissal without prejudice.⁷ After entering judgment, the clerk must terminate the pending motions and close the case.

ORDERED in Tampa, Florida, on August 7, 2018.

STEVEN D. MERRYDAY
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

⁷ Because of the disposition of the Rooker-Feldman argument (a subject-matter jurisdiction defect), the dismissal is without prejudice.
